

reduced, language activity is intensified, emotional tone is increased, and interest in learning a foreign language is maintained [1, с.31].

As songs are used for a variety of purposes and tasks, they are selected according to the purpose of the lesson, analyzing the potential of the grammatical material on which they are based, or thematic vocabulary. For the so-called complex classes, which develop creative and communicative abilities of students, the best are songs with a plot and certain social tensions. But common requirements for all types of work with songs arise when choosing them in terms of suitability for students learning English as a foreign language: they should not be too difficult to understand and traditional in grammatical construction [1].

Thus, songs can be used as thematic material for complex classes, where in parallel the consolidation of grammar rules, lexical material, the study of the rules of writing works or traditions of English culture.

English knowledge is becoming relevant every day. A person who speaks a foreign language always has more opportunities than one who does not. English has taken an important place among the world's languages, in other words, it has become the main language of international communication.

Almost everyone dreams of learning it at least at an elementary level. Nowadays, children begin to learn this language at a preschool age. Many people do not understand whether English is needed in the modern world. However, it is no secret that today it plays an important role in employment. People who want to find a prestigious and high-paying job must know English well. This is due to the fact that large companies often cooperate with foreign partners because mainly English is an international language. They must have enough knowledge to fully negotiate and enter into agreements with foreign partners. It's not a secret that today almost everyone wants to go on vacation abroad and easily communicate with people not only in English-speaking countries [2]. Many methods have been invented for learning a foreign language in the modern world. But one of the effective methods is to communicate with native speakers. In the framework of «Ukraine speaking» in order to improve speech competence and education of the population in English plan to: involve native speakers in the educational process in universities; increase the number of hours of foreign language and subjects taught in English; make changes to the legislation, which will determine the list of pedagogical, scientific and scientific-pedagogical positions in institutions that require proficiency in English; to introduce step-by-step certification of foreign language teachers in accordance with the Common European Framework of Reference for Languages [1].

Communicating with foreigners helps to learn English several times faster. First of all, every time a person who hears the pronunciation of words remembers how to speak correctly, and will make fewer mistakes.

Second, if the vocabulary is small, the student can start learning more words or make a system. In addition, acquiring knowledge of a few words a day, will give you the opportunity to communicate freely with native speakers. Third, an almost perfect accent is produced. One of the biggest advantages of such communication can be the solution of such a problem as the language barrier, which is faced by most people who are learning English or another foreign language.

This method will work better than learning English with movies, books, songs. Because during the conversation a person may find himself in a situation where he will be forced to find a way out, how to answer the interlocutor, or understand him. Also in the movies only one-sided action can be taken. We listen, we see, we understand, but we cannot answer or talk. Thus, during communication, people gain practice, which can then be used at work and in everyday life. Introducing lessons or pairs with native speakers would be a great idea. Foreigners themselves would be able to interest pupils, students and people, which would as a result, cause reaching of a new level of a new level of foreign languages. It seems that each of us is inspired by a person who speaks fluently in a language that interests us.
